Recent studies have shown that Gastro-oesophageal reflux disease (GORD) is a growing problem in the Australian population. There has been a significant increase in the rate of new diagnoses of GORD and an increase in the management rate in general practice.

This education session will provide GPs with relevant information regarding early diagnosis, objective testing and forms of treatment both surgical and non-surgical.

Following this session you will be able to:

- Develop a comprehensive therapeutic plan for a patient with GORD using patient specific information.
- Analyse clinical evidence for the treatment of GORD.
- Determine the efficacy of proton pump inhibitor (PPI) use for a patient on the basis of the medical history.
- Distinguish patients with GORD who are appropriate candidates for referral to a surgeon for further investigations such as pH and Manometry studies and surgical treatment such as Nissen Fundoplication.

Speaker:

Professor Ash Memon, Specialist Surgeon
MBBS, MA Clin Ed, DCH, FRACS FRCSI, FRCSEd, FRCSEng, FACS

Professor Ash Memon is a surgeon and endoscopist with over 25 years of experience. His special interest in upper GI has resulted in his development of a full upper GI diagnostic centre facilitating early diagnosis, evaluation and treatment of reflux disease.
